Greek Mythic Tarot Reading

With Richard

Your reading will be divided into five categories:

- ★ Your current situation
- ★ Your present desires
- ★ The unexpected
- ★ Probable events 1-3 months from now
- ★ Probable events 4-6 months from now

In the Five of Cups we see Psyche chasing after Eros in the dead of night. She has just betrayed his trust in vowing never to look at him. He immediately flees, leaving Psyche alone.

In Tarot the 5 card is almost always negative and/or tragic. In this case the tragedy is betrayal. In a reading this could indicate the pain the client is feeling from betraying someone or something else...sadness...remorse...etc.

Notice that only four of the five cups have spilled. This indicates that the situation is not final. There is still hope that restitution can be made and lessons can be learned. It is up to the client to take the challenge and make a commitment for the future.

His Tarot readings are often deep and revealing, providing his clients with a new and profound understanding of what lies before them as well as how to deal with their current challenges.

He has published a book: THE POWER OF SELF-AWARENESS AND SELF-ACCEPTANCE: A Guide For Finding Happiness Within. It is a compilation of his teachings over the past 35+ years. It is available in paperback and as an audiobook.

On The Anthropomorphization Of Spirit

A very large word with a very simple meaning. Anthropomorphosis is the ascribing of human traits onto non-human beings. It's a natural thing to do but is often fraught with difficulties, especially when it comes to spirit.

When mankind slowly evolved into an aware species, they relied upon their minds to survive. Food, water, and shelter all had to be procured. In order to do these things, early men had to rely upon their intelligence. In other words, their minds had to understand their own abilities and limitations in order to plan for future events. And so with the use of logic, they figured out how to hunt effectively, grow crops, create suitable clothing, build shelters, etc. All of these things the mind could understand and cope with, remembering that survival was its primary focus.

However, there were phenomena that occurred for which the mind had no answer. Where did the rain come from? What were clouds? Why did the sun move in the sky and where did it go at night? The mind had no rational explanation for any of this. It could understand day-to-day living, but it had no reasonable answer for these phenomena that were universal.

But the mind demanded an answer...it needed to understand because some of these phenomena were dangerous. And since it is the mind's primary mission to preserve it's life, it was imperative that it understood everything it could in order to keep the person (and itself) as safe as possible.

But how could it understand that which it couldn't fathom? All the mind understood was human behavior...that was all it knew. It had no other options, and so it relied upon that for the answers to the things it could not explain.

These powerful forces were a challenge for the mind to understand. It was obvious that they could not have been created or controlled by one man or even of a tribe of men. Therefore it was obvious that whatever controlled these forces was much more powerful and influential than mankind was...therefore the concept of a "god" was created, a being so great that it could create and control these enormous energies. This gave the mind a sensible, logical solution as to what these forces were and why they happened.

However, the mind also noticed intent. Why did Urok get killed by lightning when Zardoz did not? Using the mind's logic, there must be a reason for this too...the gods seem to have a purpose in their actions.

So it gave the gods personalities that fit the phenomena. E.g. lightning was sudden, and destructive. Therefore that god must be an angry one. The rain god was kinder because rain helped the crops grow. The wind god was mercurial, sometimes violent, sometimes calm...etc.

Over time more and more gods were added to the pantheon until finally early religions began. And since powerful human rulers and kings demanded certain things, the immensely powerful gods would demand even more. Kings meted out punishment for those who refused them, so too must the gods – only the punishment would have to be commensurate with their greater power.

Human civilizations had rulers, so the gods must have rulers too. Thus they created beings like Zeus, Brahman, Ra, Odin, etc. to rule over the other gods as well as mankind. Human kings wanted devotion and respect. So it followed that the god kings must also want the same. The god kings aren't physical therefore they didn't need money, so perhaps glorification would appease them.

These days we look at these early religions with amusement at their simplicity and naiveté. We consider our modern religions to be more sophisticated and accurate. We have only one god, not several. We understand the role of science in explaining phenomena and can separate that from spirituality. We have finally got it right.

But is that true? Perhaps not.

Let's take Christianity as an example. Rather than have many gods, it has only one. This being has no equals and is the creator of everything. It is omniscient as well as omnipotent.

This being is considered to be a loving god but it also has been given other traits like vengeance, anger, and impatience. This behavior is demonstrated many times in the Bible, which is purportedly God's word.

This is not an article on the existence of God, so for the sake of argument let's agree that this being exists. The bare truth is that we cannot hope to know a being whose consciousness and awareness is beyond our comprehension anymore than a mouse can know our level of awareness or the meaning of our actions as it pertains to the mouse. If a mouse had a greater sense of awareness, it would probably describe us as large evil mice focused on killing them. They have no other means to describe us along with no other motivations other than what they know.

We do this all the time with animals lower on the phylogenetic scale. We often ascribe human emotions to dogs, apes, and other intelligent species. And we are (I believe) often times correct. But we really don't know everything a dog thinks or feels, however we do know enough to interact with these beings in a mutually beneficial way.

But when it comes to beings beyond our human comprehension, we are lost.

Would a supreme god be a 'he'? Would a supreme god have a gender at all? Would a supreme god create a list of commandments for us to follow or else incur his/her wrath by spending eternity in hell? Would a supreme being need to rest after creating the universe? Would a supreme being demand to be worshipped? Would a supreme being test a human's devotion against another god to prove that the man preferred him as in the case of Job? If God were truly loving and all-powerful, would any of these things exist? Is this anthropomorphism or not?

What do you think? Only you can make that decision for yourself.

So here is my truth: We have no idea whatsoever what God is like or spirit in general. And we have no idea of how or why they behave as they do. It would be foolish to believe that they act like us and are motivated by the same concerns and needs. In fact, it would be more sensible to completely remove all human motivations and reactions from consideration.

All we can truly know is that in essence, we humans are beings of love and since these spiritual entities are here, they must support our truth...that love is all that matters and that they demand no fealty, sacrifice, or devotion. Our only purpose is that we expand the essence of the love that we are.

And that is all we can say.
